MODERN GEO ECONOMICAL QUESTIONS ANSWERED,
BY BANKSY.

- Q Dear Banksy,
With a sluggish domestic market, slowing economic growth, huge private borrowing and a weakening tertiary sector how do you, in your infinite graphics wisdom, recommend we in the USA steady our faltering economy?

Yours patiently,
Alan Greenspan
Chairman of the Federal Reserve
- A Dear Alan,
All property is theft, at least that's what the dudes at Cargo told me when they settled up for those drawings I did. I think we can all learn something from that. You could talk George Lucas into flogging the Jabba The Hut suit to James Lavelle as a water bed, though I believe he's already got one. Right, I'm off to sniff paint thinners and draw some policemen anally violating an H-bomb.
Love,
Banksy
- Q Dear Graffiti deity,
With woefully low aid budgets and a widening gap between rich and poor, how would you recommend we halve global poverty, reduce infant mortality and provide primary education for all?
Yours expectantly,
James Wolfhosen,
President of the World Bank
- A Dear Jim,
Globalisation is chequebook vandalism but on, like, a global scale. Ban coke and Nikes! Drink Pepsi and wear Adidas instead. Right, where's my monkey in a tank stencil? I've got to do a few more pictures before Fraiser is on.
Cheers and lovely,
Banksy
- Q My main economics man,
I need to accomplish the near impossible task of devaluing the peso, without it leading to hyperinflation, the collapse of banking system and fresh rioting. How do I do it?
Yours humbly,
Eduardo Duhalde
President of Argentina
- A Dear Eddie,
Have you ever noticed dog spelled backwards is god? Weird innit? There's a fine line between genius and madness, yet fortunately it's one I never get close to. Ever thought of selling the Falklands?

Yours thickly,
Banksy
